JSRCC Culinary Arts Program receives full accreditation from American Culinary Federation

RICHMOND, Va. (March 18, 2010) – J. Sargeant Reynolds Community College’s Culinary Arts Program recently received full accreditation from the Accrediting Commission of the American Culinary Federation.

The American Culinary Foundation (ACF) is the national accrediting commission for culinary and pastry education programs at postsecondary institutions and secondary programs. ACF is the largest professional chefs organization in North America

"The Commission evaluates faculty, curriculum, facilities, student services, and administrative capability to ensure that the program promotes successful student outcomes," said David Pantone, CEC, CEPC, CCE, AAC, and ACFEF Accrediting Commission chair.

The College benefits from accreditation by creating public trust, ensuring established standards, accountability and credibility, a high level of professionalism and current practices.

“Our College is pleased to be recognized with the accreditation by the American Culinary Foundation,” said JSRCC President Gary L. Rhodes. “It says so much for the quality of the education offered at Reynolds.”
